THE SALES PLAYBOOK

How to open, investigate, quote, close and rehash — plus what to do and what never to do while you are doing it. Policy, pay and hours live in your Orientation Handout. This book is only about selling.

Your day has a shape.

Monday to Friday you are at ATMO for 7:30 AM, and your store shift is scheduled from 9:00 AM. Saturday and Sunday you go straight to your store. Everything on this page is the frame the rest of this book hangs on.

SALES FLOOR SHIFTS

AM	9:00 – 3:30
PM	3:30 – 8:30
SWING	11:00 – 6:00
FULL	9:00 – 8:30 · 1hr lunch

WHERE YOU REPORT

Mon–Fri: ATMO 7:30 AM, then store from 9:00 AM.
Sat & Sun: straight to your store, no office.

FIRST TWENTY MINUTES ON THE FLOOR

Tablet charged and logged in. Today's offers confirmed in the quoting tool with your own eyes. Kiosk reset and facing traffic. Store staff greeted by name. Then you start talking to people — not after.

WHAT A GOOD SHIFT LOOKS LIKE ON PAPER

Conversations

Everyone who passes gets a greeting. Count them.

To the table

They stopped and let you ask questions.

Quotes built

A real number against a real bill.

Closes asked

Not closes won — closes asked for. That is the number you control.

MY DAILY TARGETS — SET THESE WITH YOUR MANAGER

CONVERSATIONS	TO TABLE	QUOTES	CLOSES ASKED

Five steps, every time.

This is a structure for building interest in a stranger who did not come to the store to see you. Run it in order. Skipping a step is the single most common reason a conversation dies.

- | | | |
|----------|---------------------|---|
| 1 | Introduction | Smile — it is contagious. Eye contact — it builds trust. Enthusiasm — it builds curiosity. Open warm and open simple. Never lead with a question that can be answered "no". |
| 2 | Short story | One clear reason you are standing there today. Two sentences maximum, then move. Do not linger waiting for permission to continue — that pause is where they leave. |
| 3 | Presentation | Tablet in hand. Investigative questions first — the four Ps. Then a real quote against a real bill. You are not presenting a product, you are presenting their number next to what they pay now. |
| 4 | Close | Assume the sale and ask for the ID. The close happens at the peak of interest, not after it has faded. Close fast, wrap up slow. |
| 5 | Rehash | Never stop at one yes. Get more excited, not less. Add the services that genuinely fit the household, then ask who else in the house is on the account. |

THE THREE THINGS YOU SELL

Yourself — posture, energy, and how you carry the conversation. They buy you first.

The product — the service, the devices, the home internet.

The benefit — what they actually gain, and why signing up here with you beats doing it later online.

WRITE YOUR OWN OPENER

In your words. A memorised script sounds like a memorised script.

Fifteen feet to five feet.

The approach is decided before you speak. By the time they are five feet away, they have already read your posture, your face, and whether you look like someone worth stopping for.

15 FEET

Stand up straight, face the traffic, hands out of pockets. Make eye contact and hold it for a beat. Smile before you speak.

10 FEET

Angle your body toward them, never block them. Step out from behind the kiosk. Open with warmth, not a pitch.

5 FEET

Short story, then straight into a question. Get them talking within ten seconds or you have lost the window.

READ THE CUSTOMER — THEN SPEND YOUR TIME ACCORDINGLY

TYPE	WHAT YOU SEE	WHAT YOU DO
Easy	Stops, answers, asks a question back.	Go straight to the quote. Do not over-talk a yes.
Medium	Slows down, guarded, one-word answers.	Two more questions. Find the pain in their bill, then quote.
Hard	Ignores questions, "not interested", waves you off.	Thank them and let them go instantly. Next person.

DO NOT PREJUDGE

You cannot tell who has money, who has four lines, or who is about to switch carriers by looking at them. The rep who prejudices works half a territory and wonders why the averages do not hold. Territory means people, not square footage.

Twenty greetings out loud, before your first shift.

Then twenty more on the drive in. Confidence is volume, not talent — the opener has to be boring to you before it sounds natural to them.

The four Ps.

You cannot quote what you have not asked about. Every strong presentation is built on four answers you got from them, in their words, before you touched the tablet.

Phone

What are they carrying, how old is it, is it paid off, is there a trade-in sitting in a drawer at home?

Plan

How many lines, who is on the account, who else is in the household, do they have internet at the same address?

Price

What do they pay now, all in, every month? Get the real number — not the number they remember.

Promotion

What would they qualify for — appreciation discount, switcher reimbursement, trade-in tier, bundle?

PARROT IT BACK

Repeat what they told you before you present. It proves you listened and it locks in the reason they should care.

"So you're paying around ninety a line and you've never actually seen the bill broken down — is that right?"

"So the priority is getting your daughter's line off your plan without her losing the number, correct?"

PRESENT THE NUMBER, NOT THE FEATURES

Turn the tablet toward them. Show what they pay now, what they would pay with us, and the one-line reason for the gap. Then stop talking. The first person to speak after the number is the customer.

SAY THIS OUT LOUD, EVERY TIME — NON-NEGOTIABLE

The first three months of billing and what they will actually see. Any activation or one-time fee. That reimbursement offers carry a 36-month agreement, and cancelling in months 1–12 charges back in full, 13–24 at half, 25–36 at a quarter. A customer who is surprised by their first bill is a cancellation, a chargeback, and a story the store manager repeats.

THREE QUESTIONS I ASK EVERY CUSTOMER — WRITE THEM IN AND USE THEM

Close fast. Wrap up slow.

The close is not a moment of persuasion. It is the natural next sentence after a good presentation. Ask for the ID like it is the obvious thing to do, because it is.

Assumptive close	"Perfect — go ahead and grab your ID for me and we'll get this started." No question mark. You already decided this is happening.
Either-or close	"Do you want to move both lines over today, or just start with yours and add hers next week?" Both answers are a yes.
Direct close	"That saves you about forty a month. Ready to lock it in?" Simple, honest, and it earns a straight answer either way.
Urgency close	Only ever real urgency — a promotion with a genuine end date, or the fact that you are not in this store tomorrow. Never invent a deadline. Ever.

CLOSER'S MENTALITY

Ask for the sale ten times before you accept a no. Not ten times in a row, badgering — ten different angles across the conversation. Most reps ask once, hear a soft no, and quietly agree with them.

THE WRAP-UP IS PART OF THE SALE

Recap the plan, the price, the first bill, and the next steps out loud while they are still standing there. Confirm the sale activated before you celebrate it. A sale that cancels is worse than a sale never written.

REHASH — NEVER STOP AT ONE YES

Back to the table	The household	Only what fits
They already trust you. This is the easiest second sale you will ever make.	Who else is on the account? Is there internet at the same address? Any line they've been meaning to move?	Add-ons they don't need come back as cancellations with your name on them. Fit first, always.

Objections are questions.

Not rejections. Acknowledge, answer in one breath, then ask a question back so you are the one steering again. Never argue, never get defensive, never sigh.

"I'm happy with what I have."

"Totally fair — most people are until they see the breakdown. If I showed you the same coverage for less, would that be worth two minutes? What are you paying now, all in?"

"I don't have time right now."

"I hear you, and I'm not going to hold you up. Give me your bill total and I'll tell you in thirty seconds whether it's even worth a conversation. If it's not, I'll say so."

"I need to talk to my husband / wife / partner."

"Makes sense, it's a household decision. Let's get the exact numbers on paper so you're not guessing when you talk tonight — are they available by phone right now?"

"I'm still under contract / paying off my phone."

"That's actually the most common situation I deal with. There's a reimbursement path for exactly that — how much is left on the device, roughly?"

"I'll just do it online later."

"You can — but the trade-in valuation and the in-person promotions aren't the same online, and there's nobody there to catch a mistake on your account. Two minutes here saves the callback later. Ready to look?"

"I had a bad experience with them before."

"I believe you, and I'm not going to talk you out of it. Here's what's different: as a Costco member who buys at this kiosk you get a dedicated Costco member support line, not the general queue. What went wrong last time — billing or the device?" Promise the access, never the outcome.

"Is this going to raise my bill later?"

Answer this one completely honestly and completely fully — first three months, promo durations, agreement length, chargeback schedule. Never soften it. This is the answer that decides whether the sale sticks.

THE RULE

Acknowledge → answer → ask. If you finish on your answer, the silence belongs to them and they will use it to leave. Finish on a question and the conversation is still yours.

THE OBJECTION THAT BEATS ME MOST — AND MY ANSWER

Selling behaviour, not policy.

DO

Greet everyone. The averages only work if the denominator is real.

Stand where the traffic is. Front of the kiosk, facing the flow, moving.

Ask before you tell. Every fact you give before a question is a fact they didn't ask for.

Verify the offer that morning. In the tool, with your own eyes, before you quote it.

Say the first three months out loud. Every single customer, without being asked.

Log every conversation. Notebook out. You cannot fix a number you don't track.

Confirm activation. A written sale is not a paid sale until it activates.

Learn the store staff's names. They hand you customers when they like you.

Work the full shift. The last hour is where most reps quietly quit.

Debrief yourself. Three things I learned, three things I need help with.

DON'T

Don't prejudge. You cannot see a bill by looking at a jacket.

Don't chase or crowd. Ignored, "not interested", or waved off — let them go instantly.

Don't argue or talk back. Not with customers, store staff, or teammates on the floor.

Don't huddle with teammates. Two reps talking to each other is a closed kiosk.

Don't quote from memory. Offers change on the client's cycle, not yours.

Don't invent urgency. A fake deadline is the fastest way to a cancellation.

Don't oversell the household. Add-ons that don't fit come back with your name on them.

Don't touch the customer's signature. They sign the tablet themselves, in person.

Don't sit on a problem. Complaints and store-management issues go up the same day.

Don't let a no change your face. The next customer can read the last one on you.

Compliance beats production. Always. Every rule on the right-hand column exists because somebody lost a store over it. Full conduct policy, punctuality steps and pay rules are in your Orientation Handout — read them again this week.

Eight habits that decide how far you go.

01 · Attitude

Enthusiasm creates curiosity. Curiosity creates conversations.

03 · Be prepared

Mentally ready for every no. Physically ready — tablet charged, offers confirmed.

05 · Master your territory

Territory means people. Do not prejudge who has money or who is busy.

07 · Know your why

Family, freedom, fortune, or reputation. Without your own goals you serve someone else's.

02 · Be on time

Early is on time. On time is late. Cheapest way to be excellent.

04 · Work your full shift

Averages only hold over full days. A short day breaks your own numbers.

06 · Maintain attitude

People read you instantly. Every no moves you closer to a yes.

08 · Take control

Get a clear yes or no and move on. Solve situations. Set the next goal yourself.

WHICH HABIT IS COSTING ME THE MOST RIGHT NOW, AND WHAT AM I CHANGING THIS WEEK?

Build the quote six times.

For each customer below, build the quote in the tool, apply any offer they qualify for, apply the port-in credit, and write the total monthly bill. Every one correct before you work a floor alone.

CUSTOMER 01

Account holder is a mechanic. Three lines, mixed devices, currently with another carrier.

TOTAL MONTHLY BILL

CUSTOMER 02

Account holder works at a gym. Two lines, both trading in older devices.

TOTAL MONTHLY BILL

CUSTOMER 03

Account holder is a doctor's secretary. Four lines. Ask carefully before assuming eligibility.

TOTAL MONTHLY BILL

CUSTOMER 04

Account holder is a teacher. Two lines plus home internet at the same address.

TOTAL MONTHLY BILL

CUSTOMER 05

Account holder works at a grocery chain. Five lines, no trade-ins available.

TOTAL MONTHLY BILL

CUSTOMER 06

Account holder is active military. Three lines, one premium device on trade.

TOTAL MONTHLY BILL

Grading: one hundred percent. A wrong quote on the floor is a chargeback, a cancellation, and a customer who never trusts us again.

Track it or guess at it.

Fill this in at the end of every shift, not from memory at the end of the week. Bring it to your one-to-one.

THREE THINGS I LEARNED

THREE THINGS I NEED HELP WITH

HOW TO ACTUALLY GET GOOD

Build a strong foundation. Keep it as simple as you can. Build, break, rebuild. Reps, reps, reps. Confidence comes from volume, not from talent. Proud but never satisfied.
